Biography

Teaser:

Old-time Appalachian tradition, reimagined

Short:

Baltimore-based Americana multi-instrumentalist Julius Thor Bjornson brings creative, original interpretations to old-time Appalachian fiddling and the roots traditions intertwined with it.

Web:

Julius Thor Bjornson is an Americana artist & multi-instrumentalist with a focus on creative, original interpretations of old-time Appalachian music. A master of the fiddle, he writes and performs tunes and songs grounded in oral tradition and American roots music, exploring how styles and genres meet. He hopes to encourage audiences to connect with their emotional selves by inspiring contemplation and dance.

Bjornson is classically trained and holds a bachelor's degree in music from Wesleyan University with a focus on Ethnomusicology and Jazz. His style been shaped by his time and studies abroad, as well as the online Appalachian music communities he found during the pandemic. Those communities became an audience of his own: as @julius_fiddles, he shares his playing with more than 10,000 followers on TikTok.

A Fulbright grantee to Germany, he performed at the Library of Congress in 2026. His band, Big Cricket String Band, released its debut CD in May, and he has a solo record in the works.
